

What Happens To Your Retirement Plan When A Spouse Passes Away?

T. BRIAN HAYES

It is always a hard time when a spouse passes away. Obviously, there are a lot of emotions to deal with, as well as concerns and figuring out how to live without your spouse. But what happens to your retirement plan? Well, unfortunately, there are a lot of changes that happen to a retirement plan when a spouse passes away.

We have received a lot of questions regarding this topic over the last several months, and even though it is not a fun topic to discuss, we decided it was time we provided some answers and information on this topic. The fact is, this is a scenario that is going to come up because most people are married, and one of the spouses will pass away before the other in most cases. And when this happens, there are many changes that happen to a retirement plan, and some very important and critical decisions that must be made in order to make the retirement plan continue to succeed and take care of the surviving spouse for the rest of their life. In addition, there are changes that will need to be made to transfer it the most proper way to all the contingent beneficiaries. This includes children, grandchildren and any legacy desires after the surviving spouse passes away. So, even though this is not a fun topic to discuss, it is critical information that certainly can help people plan to make this eventual time as smooth and painless as possible.

The lack of planning or the incorrect planning in these areas could cause many problems and could cost your family tens of thousands or even hundreds of thousands of dollars if done incorrectly. Plus, it could subject a surviving spouse and/or other heirs to a lot of pain, suffering, and financial distress. So, join me this weekend on The Retirement Money Matters Show as we share with you and discuss the many changes that happen and critical decisions that will need to be made should your spouse pass away. In addition, we will inform you about the biggest factor of all that costs a surviving spouse a lot of money each year and that hardly anyone plans for, just from a lack of knowledge or proper advisement. The show airs on Saturday morning at 6 am on WIBE (93.1 FM), Sunday morning at 8 am on WWKI (100.5 FM), or online at www.theretirementmoneymattersshow.com.
