

Question of the Month

T. BRIAN HAYES

“Dear Brian. “I have heard a lot about the benefits of doing Roth conversions to become more tax efficient. However, someone told me it is not a good idea because of the lost opportunity cost. What does that mean specifically, and is this a reason not to do Roth conversions? Thank you.” LeAnn

Brian Hayes: Hi LeAnn. Very good question! Every retirement tool and strategy has its advantages and disadvantages, as well as times where it should and should not be used; Roth conversions are no different. This is a great move for a lot of people to make, however, there are situations where you shouldn't do a Roth conversion. But there is no 'lost opportunity cost' to a Roth conversion. This is a myth and not a factor against doing a Roth conversion.

The point argued here is that using funds now to pay the tax upfront on a Roth conversion means losing the future earnings that could have been produced on those funds you paid the tax with, i.e. an opportunity cost. Again, this is simply not true. The main factor here is taxes, meaning the difference between the tax rates paid upfront, now at the time of conversion, versus the projected tax rates, either later in retirement or for beneficiaries.

It's all about the tax rates: not inflation, not earnings, and certainly not the lost opportunity cost. If the tax rates are the same both at conversion and later in retirement, the end financial result will be exactly the same, and this is true regardless of how long the funds are invested before being withdrawn in retirement.

To illustrate this point, let's take a look at an example. Let's look at a $100,000 IRA, and let's just assume a lifetime earnings rate of 200% and a tax rate of 30%. With no Roth conversion, that $100,000 would grow to $300,000, but after the 30% tax rate, the IRA would be worth $210,000. Now let's look at it with a Roth conversion. Let's go ahead and convert that $100,000 today with a tax rate of 30%. This will knock the balance down to $70,000 and with the 200% lifetime earnings, it would grow to $210,000. The result is exactly the same as if you didn't do a conversion.

So, as you can see, the decision whether or not to do a Roth conversion is all about taxes. When can you pay the least amount of tax, now by doing a conversion, or later by not doing a conversion? That is the key question you need to answer before you decide whether or not to do a Roth conversion. With taxes right now at all-times lows, it is likely that for a lot of people, tax rates could be higher in retirement, making the case for doing Roth conversions now. For more detailed information on this question and to get answers to many more retirement planning questions submitted by our readers and listeners, join me on The Retirement Money Matters Educational Radio Show Program where we will answer this question in more detail as well as several more retirement planning questions. The show airs on Saturday morning at 6 on WIBC (93.1 FM),

Saturday morning on 930 AM The Answer is Sarasota, Sunday morning at 8 on WWKI (100.5 FM), or online at www.theretirementmoneymattersshow.com. You can also obtain this information by reaching out to us at Hayes Advisory Group at 452-PLAN (7526), 800-939-1603 or brian@hayesadvisorygroup.com.

Investment Advisory Services offered through Brookstone Capital Management LLC and Milestone Asset Management LLC, both Registered Investment Advisors. Investments and/or investment strategies involve risk including the possible loss of principal. There is no assurance that any investment strategy will achieve its objectives. This information is not intended to be used as the sole basis for financial decisions, nor should it be construed as advice designed to meet the particular needs of an individual's situation. T. Brian Hayes and/or Hayes Advisory Group are not affiliated with or endorsed by the Social Security Administration or any other government agency. The information provided is not intended as tax or legal advice and should not be relied on as such. You are encouraged to seek tax or legal advice from an independent professional. Any examples are for illustrative purposes only and do not take into account your particular investment objectives, financial situation, or needs and may not be suitable for all investors. It is not intended to project the performance of any specific investment and is not a solicitation or recommendation of any investment strategy.

T. BRIAN HAYES

FOUNDER & PRESIDENT

T. Brian Hayes is the Founder, Owner, and CEO of Hayes Advisory Group, boasting over 30 years of experience in guiding clients towards their retirement goals. Specializing in pre-retirees and retirees, he ensures clients understand their planning options and tailors strategies to their unique needs. A strong advocate for education, Hayes regularly writes and speaks on financial topics, hosts a weekly radio show on retirement, and instructs for The Prepare Institute, a 501-3 non-profit educational institution. He holds memberships in prestigious financial organizations like The Indiana Network of Estate Planning Professionals and The National Association of Insurance and Financial Advisors. Hayes is a distinguished member of the Million Dollar Roundtable (MDRT), with multiple honors recognizing his professional expertise and ethical standards. Based in Central Indiana, he serves clients across the U.S. and Canada, residing with his wife and three children.

